

Plan your garden room

A practical starting point for a room that works beautifully for you.

01 Decide what matters most

Start with the main purpose: working, relaxing, fitness or a mix. List the activities you want to enjoy and the furniture or equipment they need. For a multi-use room, decide which activity gets priority.

02 Measure your garden

Measure the proposed footprint and note boundaries, trees, planting, paths and access. Mark it out in the garden to picture its scale. Record any slopes or obstacles for your site discussion. Confirm dimensions and suitability before ordering.

03 Arrange the larger pieces first

Place your desk, sofa or exercise equipment before adding smaller items. Check your actual furniture measurements. Leave a clear route from the entrance, room to pull back a chair, and access to cupboards. Test alternatives in plan view.

04 Make natural light work for you

Try a desk beside a window rather than facing directly into bright light. Consider screen glare, privacy and the view from your seat. Think about how sunlight changes through the day; test several window positions before deciding.

Keep it flexible

Allow room for the way your space might change over time.

Bring the details together

Openings, services and a considered foundation complete your plan.

05 Choose doors and windows thoughtfully

Try openings on different walls. Think about the approach from your garden, ventilation, privacy and useful wall space. Keep door access clear of furniture and leave uninterrupted wall space where you need storage.

06 Plan everyday comfort

List what needs power: screens, chargers, lighting, heating and other equipment. Think about socket locations and internet connectivity. Discuss service positions and installation requirements with Garden Living Spaces before finalising.

07 Start with the right foundation

Ground screws create a level steel support with minimal excavation and no curing time. Concrete is a traditional solid base requiring more groundwork and time to cure. The right choice depends on your ground conditions and access; Garden Living Spaces will assess your space.
